

Health checks for young athletes

The young athlete health check provides an overview of the health status and physical capacity of the young athlete.

The main goals are to find out contraindications and partial restrictions for sports and to identify health risks.

Young athletes up to 19 years of age (inclusive) are welcome to the health check who, in addition to physical education classes at school, regularly participate in training sessions at a sports club, sports school or the regular school for at least 6 hours a week (1 training session = 45 minutes).

The young athlete will undergo health examinations according to their weekly academic training load. Physical education classes at the general education school are not included in the training.

The studies are divided into A, B and C complex studies, respectively:

Training load	Volume of examinations/tests	Frequency	Performed by
6-9 academic hours per week, including competitions	A, additional studies for medical indications	every 2 years	specialist
10 or more academic hours per week, including competitions	B and C, additional studies for medical indications	once a year	specialist

Complex examination A – a complex of basic examinations, which includes a resting 12-lead ECG with computer analysis, spirometry and a primary appointment with a specialist (filling in a questionnaire, medical examination, summary of health examination, issuance of a certificate).

Complex examination B – a complex of examinations, which includes a resting 12-lead ECG with computer analysis, 12-lead ECG stress test on a bicycle ergometer or exercise track, spirometry and a primary appointment with a specialist (filling in a questionnaire, medical examination, summary of health examination, issuing a certificate).

Complex examination C – a complex of examinations, which includes a resting 12-lead ECG with computer analysis, 12-lead ECG stress test on a bicycle ergometer or exercise track, complex oxygen consumption test, spirometry and a primary appointment with a specialist (filling in a questionnaire, medical examination, summary of health examination, issuing a certificate).
